Interview Preparation: Decade Designer

Maria “Nina” Ricci inspires me with her ingenuity and commitment to designing. In addition to being a designer and tailor, which was her major focus in life, she and her son established their own company. They also expanded beyond clothing, including perfume, accessories, and leather commodities. She could take a piece of fabric she like and make highly effective use of it. She knew how to make proficient use of materials on hand and make designs that used them well.

Her designs were popular for being refined, romantic, and feminine. She sought for elegance in her designs with details to attract attention. To this day, her company still advertises its emphasis on feminism, in all its varieties found around the world. Her style set an example that people have followed for decades and continue to do so.
